

SERIALIZED

(in four parts)

PART ONE

Section One through "Jonah" {page 84 of the published edition}

UPRIVER, BEYOND THE BEND with
AT ABBY CREEK

poetry

by Homer Kizer

(AT ABBY CREEK was nominated for a Pushcart Award by Rick Bass; its first 24 stanzas appeared in American Nature Writing 1998 edited by John A. Murray, Sierra Club Books.)

IN SEARCH OF A GRAND STYLE--

Augustine urges pious teachers to master rhetoric so God won't receive short shrift because of who contends for souls; urges edification in a subdued style, persuasion in a grand style. Is this why England's blind poet sought to justify the ways of God in verse? My words lack the eloquence of Milton, nor am I as ambitious. But ignored pricks, sharp as rose thorns, now compel time be spent giving gratis what I received gratis what I neither sought nor wanted till I understood it's easier to compute a tithe, to write a check, to support a work than to speak unwanted words. Silence is easy as is remaining the student; yet the hour comes when it's necessary to joust with giants: better to try & to fail than to not have tried, the lesson of the windmills so I hereby step forward to speak against the millstones of orthodoxy, knowing my voice will be a mere sabot kicked between gears of well-oiled machinery, but its splinters will prick & fester long after I return to dust if I find a grand style.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Section One 6
CLIMBING THE HEADLAND	7
FROSTED BIRCHES GILL THE MELTING SUN	9
THAT SNAG--	11
secular--	13
AT A READING LAST NIGHT	14
separation--	15
they don't fit--	16
to an unknown brother--	17
public enemy #1--	18
VISION--	19
the rapture--	20
the Demonstration--	21
A WORK OF GOD IS RECONCILIATION	22
THE PEOPLE THINK	23
AS AN ARTIST CELEBRATED TONIGHT	24
LIBRARY	25
WENT TO A READING TONIGHT	35
CALLED TO TESTIFY	36
THE VISIT--	37
PERSPECTIVE--	38
DOUBLE VOICED--	40
JUST A WOMAN	41
QUITTING CANTON	42
december sabbath--	43
millennium fever--	44
US & THEM	45
BURIAL--	50
FROM THE MARGINS	51
WHERE	56
a thing borrowed--	58
RAIN	59
EARNESTNESS	60
That Lie Job Believed--	61
THE TRADEOFF--	62
HILLY--	63
DOES IT MATTER?	64
THE POULT	65
answering the summons--	68
SHE KNOCKED--	69
READING AUGUSTINE'S ON CHRISTIAN DOCTRINE ,	70
North's Chuckwagon, Spokane, 1983--	71
GRANDMA WROTE POETRY	72
SUNDAY SUNRISE--	73

WHEN MILTON SOUGHT TO JUSTIFY THE WAYS OF GOD	74
CARL SAGAN--	75
ON THE BAPTISM OF MY SECOND DAUGHTER	76
WEASELS	77
why hell--	79
LEGALISM	80
JUSTICE	81
FORMLINE--	82
JONAH--	84
WHEN I MET HIM	85
THE MISSION	87
GUN BLUE CLOUDS GLOW	88

Section Two 89

the aerie--	90
W QUESTIONS--	91
PREDATOR--	92
WHO ARE YOU, KENNEWICK MAN--	93
HE SENT HIS BOOK	94
EQUILIBRIUM--	95
AGING	96
AFTER DRIVING ALL NIGHT & ALL DAY	97
DOGWOODS	98
LOOKING AT APPLES IN NURSERY CATALOGUES	99
CRANES	100
FROSTED WINGS SHIMMER	101
FORTY BELOW	102
A WESTWARD WIND--	103
CURIOUS ABOUT GOOSEBERRIES	104
charred--	105
PETALS OF EARLY ROSES FALL	106
REUNION--	107
INVITED TO A VEGETARIAN POTLUCK	108
RESPECTABLE PEOPLE DECRY	109
ASHES--	110
american falls--	111
COVERED BRIDGES	112
LEWISTON--	113
Anchorage--	114
LADYBUGS--	115
FATE--	116
A HOMESTEAD--	117
HERE & EVERYWHERE--	118
GOBI LADY--	119
domestication--	120
HARD EDGED	121

SNAGGING EELS	122
Good Friday, 1964	123
BROTHER TO BROTHER	124
SMITH, LOGGER, FISHERMAN, WRITER		125
Section Three	126
ALONG A SAGGING FENCELINE		127
OPENING DAY	128
A DIFFERENT WORLD--	132
HUNTING--	133
FEATHERS--	134
DAWN	135
THE BEAR	136
FIRST BLOOD	137
THAT NIGHT WITH NO LANTERN		141
reflections--	144
GOOD INTENTIONS--	145
IMAGINATION--	146
hobbling along--	147
fool hens--	148
IN CALF-DEEP SNOW, A MOOSE		149 meat--	150
spoor--	151
who will translate paint spills		152 a buck with velvet forks	152
AT ABBY CREEK	153

Section One

dust--

a raven circles life seeped into loess that once flew in a whirlwind with God

CLIMBING THE HEADLAND

between Gull Point & Eagle Harbor, I see perched on drooping briars where a rose bramble narrows the trail, two sparrows, each with dripping crest, fluffed breast, spiral their graven tune towards heaven.

Below, gray light, misty, drifts in quickstepping columns, each battering the curved bight—a gray sky wedged between roily horizons, a gray seiner, dipping, bow disappearing beneath silent white eruptions, curled spray mast high.

Beyond the plastic boat, mystic Ugak Island bares its black & gray stone stripes, forms twin rips that flit across the bay.
Last here a year ago, I remember that hail hammered our cabin behind the spruce grove.

Pitched lashings of rain stung plywood walls; the ceiling wept, wet clothes dripped.
I watched rust flakes pop from the drum stove, red-orange hot; I was guiding two hunters, both new ministers with congregations who will hear lessons drawn from the morning to evening, evenings through mornings that we sat listening to the hissing lantern burning all day.

Thirty foot combers raced past the gray-faced cape, past our bight, till the wind laid down Wednesday evening. The rolling pound of surf, softening towards dawn though crashing on the gray sand beach, fanned our hopes of crossing Ugak before we starred in a Coast Guard rescue.

Three days overdue, we loaded gear and both hunters' deer into my Zodiac, launched through breakers, took two curlers over the top—prop touched bottom, pin sheared, a second try, pushed out farther.
Nine miles of winter brine, the last five through fog too thick to see island or cape, my hand locked on the tiller, sitting in water, without compass or marker—cold-stiff, we crossed, keeping seas to our stern quarter, found the river, and staggered ashore like three Jonas. Now, seas wash untracked sand, and push against gray & green cliffs broken by a waterfalls' white blaze. If I could I'd stretch tired arms towards the heavens and sail with that gray-winged gull, yes, the one that circles now. We'd glide along the beach, search for clams in the surge, then rise over grassy headlands and the aerie on the Point and the crusty snow on the ridge where the old sow dens. We'd meet saints in the clouds, converse a while, then turn around to begin again work that needs done here on the mountain I climb.

FROSTED BIRCHES GILL THE MELTING SUN

catching, in swollen twigs, small globes bright as morning stars—a moose breaks willows beside icicles hanging from a shoveled roof, & like a pendulum hung plumb, the moon appears stopped over the fog veil that hides sanded streets still as spider threads.

Two days from full, two days from Jerusalem, the pale moon heralds the second Passover here, north of night, where killing the sacrifice between the evenings gives us till August to shed blood. That's not what the Eternal intended, so the Law must be interpreted by men. God help us.

after grace--

after dinner we wondered about wondering & in soft voice our host—he said he was a simple farmer not someone educated like myself—prayed to the God he knew as well as he knew himself, giving thanks for our ability to give thanks he didn't ask to receive things or help even though he could use both so I listened to his words with interest as I imagine they were listened to wherever they were heard

THAT SNAG—

not much was happening in Alaska so I loaded my wife & kids her sewing machine & five chainsaws into a decade old pickup & headed down the Highway to look for a cutting job stayed with my sister a couple of days found a job falling for a gypo a white pine selective cut near the Divide all good sticks two bushel a tree or more my saws were a little small my bars a little short for timber so large I'd never fallen trees five, six, seven feet in diameter but I needed work so sure I can do it but I must confess

I prayed before I started chips flying skiptooth chain gnawing centuries of growing—when Lewis & Clark passed by these pines were already tall a week became a month I still knelt a moment or two each morning but I'd become comfortable tipping over giants so my concern was where would we spend winter once snows came; we were then tent camping the gypo skidded with D-6s skidded treelength a faller & a buckler with each Cat the buckler on the landing the faller setting chokers so when I tipped over a pine the Cat couldn't budge

I went to put in a Russian coupling at 66 feet—for fellows who don't understand a Russian coupling's where a suspended log is cut half in-two then ringed so it breaks when jerked—there was twelve feet under this pine still more than four feet across at 66 feet

I cut
when ringing that pine a bit too deep heard the crack & threw my saw & it threw me
I landed on my saw dogs they sorta impaled my left thigh but what I didn't see was the pine had snapped off a red fir snag three feet or so across the catskiner hollered, LOOK OUT but I couldn't get up felt like I was being held down no matter how much I fought

I rolled over rolled a couple of times & looked up to see the snag falling across me—flat on my back nowhere to go
I put up my hands as if to catch it it bounced up maybe twenty feet fell across me a second time then took off hurled out over the canyon two hundred yards or more rising & falling in the same arc

I would've given a broomhandle

I stood a little blood coming from my thigh both wrists badly sprained the catskiner was ashen looked as if he died but after a minute

he said
You've got somebody looking out for you.

I wanted to tell all that had happened to me wanted to tell of miracles but the only words that came were You're right.

secular—

the leaning sun sends long shadows across sumac hunter red—chokecherries along the railroad are almost orange—even aspens are tinged pink where they mingle with yellowed cottonwoods—a hen searches for snowberries missed by wild turkeys that passed through earlier this Sabbath day home alone, nursing a scalded foot I listen to radio pleadings for a secular ministry—what would a secular ministry preach a few yellow apples still hang among yellow leaves on the seedlings above the tracks where a doe & her yearling hide from rifles & riflemen intent upon harvesting winter meat & I start a venison stew while dogs bark at the mail carrier honking for me to sign for certified letters for debts I don't remember for debts I can't pay despite all the good work I do

AT A READING LAST NIGHT

I realized I write of phenomena so what do I make of snowberries beside the hen house sporting new green growth among falling leaves or of a chokecherry beside them now in full bloom on branches still holding changed leaves today, October 25th, 1998 is this bit of spring in autumn a heavenly sign ancients might have read as returned fertility to a long silent womb or is something more scientific happening like global warming of a ten foot strip from which I survey a river vista of yellow & red leaves fluttering in an evening breeze

I only report what I see what it means is more mysterious so I break a flowered branch that will now never set winter fruit & give it to a new wife who prays for one more child who will be reared by both father & mother

separation—

to be seen I have to fall a few trees here along the road so with waiting saw I check a lean begin the face feeling in vibrations the chain pull life from years of growing before my conception my aim is certain

my bar is too short to reach across so I reach behind her bleeding face & send a shower of chips & fines into her deathbed

in small groans & squeaks no louder than a caught mouse this pine tells of her separation

I jump atop her butt saw in hand
its bar hard before me & sever limbs that once caught dew & snow spring breezes & huntingcamp smoke

I lop off her crown survey my handiwork conclude I've done man's work

they don't fit—

Chinese shoes don't fit but they're all Wal-Mart stocks in my size all I can afford

years ago, when I worked in the pulp mill
I bought only Redwings even bought a new Ford every couple of years didn't have much money but I had enough

don't know what's happened I work as hard or harder now as I did then, work even longer hours for myself over qualified is the reason I'm told I'm not employable some fellas say that just means I'm too old

I wish it were that simple—on my way back from town I saw a dozen fellas late teens I'd guess again hanging in the park they're there every day smoking watching the cars

the President would say they need educations so they can get jobs would ask me for more tax dollars but I have a little education enough to be over qualified & I'm sure I'm still stronger than any of those fellas—

I can't even get an interview so what chance do they have of ever buying shoes that fit

to an unknown brother—

except by press clippings I don't know you, you with a Congressional appointment, an honorable preceding your name but I talked to your daughter who doesn't respect you enough to honor all you say in an Internet biography I learned you were an orphan—guess that is true but I never thought myself one was surprized to learn being an orphan was something to overcome maybe that's why our lives have followed different paths why you're in the Capitol lobbying & I'm here on the Clearwater wondering how to delay bill collectors another week another day...there doesn't seem work enough for both of us that's not true: there's plenty of work just not enough economy & too many taxes too much regulation, too much interference from too far away so by extension you are part of my problems for what I need is another timber sale more logs sawed more houses started more money circulated some of which will be spent with me & by me—instead I get more park rangers monitoring transplanted wolves spending borrowed dollars we all need

public enemy #1—

I'm tired of you saying I'm an environmental enemy yes, I fall timber yes, I run cattle yes, I am guilty of living off the land but you are not beating down my door to hire me I'm over forty, over fifty a white male, rural background I know wood, cows know a little more but apparently not enough to get interviews so I work wood nurse cattle & the day there's no timber no open range, I'm out of work so it's in my interest more than yours to guarantee growth & regrowth so get about your business let me do mine—take your entrenched attorneys your motions and memoranda all on paper from trees I fell & go home, tend your garden before you are cuckold by an old cowpuncher an old logger who beds secondgrowth now that I have logged the virgin timber

VISION—

was given a journal a poet thought I ought to read an article about technical perfection but no vision in today's poetry.

I read words, but my thoughts were about planting a high density apple orchard—the article said if I wanted to get better wanted to be accepted, I should write about war should borrow a war if I don't have my own even gave an example but my thoughts keep returning to the problems of growing apples now that we're not in Eden.

Perhaps some day I'll tackle some big issue like being a flower & waiting for God but for now I'm more concerned about moving five hundred trees I grafted two years ago.

Could I write about being a flower when we all are or aren't grafted to the Vine & even if we have been grafted not all grafts take—I know, I have grafted enough scions:

some never do anything, some put out buds that wither, some send up shoots that die—those are the ones I notice the ones that require watching.
I don't have to pay attention to scions that take till it's time to prune.

That seems the problem with poetry: we are watching those grafts that didn't quite match.
We can ignore for a season poets firmly grafted who will, in time, bear fruit.

the rapture—

1.

asked on Christian radio what will happened when an airborne pilot is raptured an educated chuckle but no answer for who wants to blame God for the deaths of so many for those who fall will believe nothing forever

2.

is not then their god
a respecter of persons favoring Jew over Gentile missionary over heathen

is not then their god
not worthy of being called Savior

3.

the God I worship laid before us in the Holy Days a plan of salvation that includes others—at his return firstfruits first as needed laborers to prepare the way for everyone else at the Last Great Day

I didn't learn to love others to leave them behind—love doesn't come easy a great price has been paid so that I will care about those who fall

the Demonstration—

with eyes still red & swollen he said it shouldn't have happened, his son hadn't done anything wrong it wasn't fair & he blamed God for not caring

I listened unsure of what to say—too much has been written about when bad things happen to good people without me adding to the confusion when rebellion rattled foundations a third believed but others were unsure so for them a proof was designed lab animals were needed to show lives of competition will prove no life at all but noone wants manipulated so the mice were left unfettered in their round cage the rebellious were released to plead their case for six days but the Sabbath belongs to design & designer to show all what love will do

as I watch my student begin to drink his possessions away, I tell him to get help...I'd intervene more forcefully if professional ethics allowed—I hurt for him but my tongue is bound by decisions made years ago & I understand better the dilemma of a designer who has given freedom from intervention till we & others know that without his love none of us would live

A WORK OF GOD IS RECONCILIATION

a message entrusted to fishermen & physicians, loggers & farmers, to families of saints founded in faith by a radio ministry of reconciliation:

I listened while driving from Salt Lake to Boise to an energized voice telling all who would hear to blow dust off their Bibles—I listened to stay awake as jackrabbits darted blind for moonlit sagebrush that stretched dark across shield volcanoes & stepped buttes & dry lakebeds where coyotes hunted & rattlesnakes sought retained warmth of flat rocks on which Utes sat while chipping birdpoints as they waited for widgeons & teal to wing their way south so winter wickiups would be filled with child birth & laughter, not knowing that across continents & seas a man was crucified so sins they didn't knowingly commit would not be remembered by a Creator they never heard of...I blew dust off my Bible & found these Utes were not in an everburning hell but in dust that then filled this room.

THE PEOPLE THINK

we're not connected to timber & totems that maybe we're here by witchery—they see our cities our plaster christs our clearcuts—they hear our talk of justice & judgement of mercy & money of grace & greed but they don't see don't hear real love—they see us all the same sticky white clay tracked over the land & they're waiting for the north wind & the south wind
& the east wind
& the west wind to blow our dust away—we have failed to show how connected we are to the One who formed this land from himself maybe as a people we forgot our faith then our stories & are now likely to bring their expected destruction upon a creation we should've remembered.

AS AN ARTIST CELEBRATED TONIGHT

I could've claimed the nametag that would've let me enter free but I paid my way into the opening a Native Arts gallery show

I listened to the flute ate the chips & tortillas watched longtime patrons after reading my name passby my work with hardly a glance

in my tattered jacket mended jeans
I mingled with a judge & his other who might have recognized me in different circumstances

I spoke with other artists all from somewhere else each as polite as if I were a customer

it wasn't till older Nez Perce filtered away from the flute that anyone noticed my little piece of work they looked at it all around asked each other what kind of wood & I had to say, apple they took my phone number—I might be asked to demonstrate Native techniques

on the reservation

so all in all, it was a pleasurable evening even though those who invited me never knew I came

LIBRARY

Book 1.

April lies still on her white skirt, the morning's warmth a pink tongue curling around soft purrs. She presses warm hands against the frosted pane, says, He likes your essays, man stuff.

I'm glad he does.

Wanting to flirt, a schoolboy again but her husband's friend,

I ask where she's been.

Asia, Africa, South America,

she mentions nations, most I know, Mexico, Morocco, more, and in whispered blushes tells of hitchhiking—

she's more at ease than I who thumbed through Cascade mountain passes twenty-four years ago to date the mother of my daughters.

I scan the alcove:

Bowed heads nod over deeds of long dead kings, highlighters mark things to be remembered, a goose is a bird that mates for life.

Her hand starts for mine, stops. A line divides us. I do the honorable thing to do-- hands now unable to reach with innocence: father, mother, single parents each...

neither innocence nor wisdom makes sense alone at night—

I won't say how little I've traveled nor how far I want to go.

I won't...oh, yes, I will.

Book 2.

A cougar roams the Blue Mountains—most say he doesn't exist, a myth created by shepherders.

I saw him once near Milton-Freewater eating the entrails of a lamb, set the dogs on him, ran him from Troy to Baker, lodgepole thickets, stone flats, ridges of standing pine, chased him into the incense cedars beyond Hell's Canyon; he swam the Snake.

He's a shifty old Tom, deceitful as dry lightning, appearing white but black as the hounds that treed him atop the basalt columns of the Pit.
He looked a god there in the sky halfway to heaven—I couldn't kill him across stateline. So he stalks me now that my thoughts run like rutting bucks, pawing scrapes, rubbing alders. I know he's out there... knowing's not enough. I reach for her hand.

Book 3.

She's not here...shadows lie across her chair by the window.
I want to throw form away, be modern, find, hold, lie with her till words fall like poetry...

*Along the northern sea where the sun won't set till August
let us lie beside white ribs out of the wind and love love until the sun sets again then we will sleep like frozen berries under a quilt of snow.*

But my heart's tempered tool steel, no, it's casehardened like the lock parts I used to file from mild plate fished from dumpsters, made usable by quenching in soft lye, mottled purple & browns skin deep, burned bruises; lock parts whose freeplay has limits not checked with a mike but seen with the eye, parts lapped till they function as silk on silk. I'm that gun, a replica of my own construction, seven lands, seven grooves, gouged by a single hook, shimmed with paper.

My center holds a patched ball:
To look down the hole requires faith no one will pull the trigger.

Book 4.

She's not here—nowhere, said she was going to Oregon, maybe she went before I could say goodbye...
Oregon's where I built rifles.
Along the Siletz River, I trapped beaver mink & otter, lived like a mountain man while war in Vietnam called brother & brother-in-law. The draft wouldn't take me, said I was too big. They missed a good one: I was cold then, a killer. Killed the love of a young wife along with too many deer & two bear. Now she lives in Oregon, alone.

*after half a lifetime she took off her wedding ring filed it & my love in drawers beside cancelled cheques & her teddy of black lace.
She left frost & permafrost bought a garden of figs & apples & grape vines planted primroses & rhododendrons offered sanctuary to other* women like her—and waits for God to approve divorce.

Minister & ministry listened to lives in paper letters posted & read:
We met on a bus, Reno to Portland, I pointed to paired geese and we married nine months later.
I worked in a pulp mill, opened a gun shop, a saw shop, went fishing and loved her in black lace. She bore three daughters who look like me and live with me and can't imagine their mother in black lace
Now she waters artichokes & strawberries plucks weeds & eyebrows—and waits.

Book 5.

I came to Alaska in '74, didn't work on the pipeline; she worked seven years for Alyeska, for her husband, my friend.
I sit in her chair & think of her;
I need a friend, not a mistake—the touch of her hand still thrills me...and I remember

a swan alone on an Arctic lake, her reflection swimming alongside, wind-rippled feathers multiplied like clouds fading as dusk overtook the long sun—I passed over miles of muskeg, lilies & black spruce, searching from a thousand plus feet for swans, breeding pairs & singles, counting & subtracting one from the other till none were as lonely as that swan.

Write me from Oregon, describe the sweetness of mowed alfalfa in fields cut this morning, look in the ditches, see the yellow blossoms missed by the sickle & the bluebirds singing from barbwire perches.

I saw them when hunting arrowheads.
It's spring; tell me if it is.

Book 6.

Evening now, and beyond the plate glass *pale green & pink bars & veils pirouette over frozen ridges & rivers like love made in lace & masks, shared times & night dances on beds of wild roses & rhubarb.

Snow like broken glass crunches underfoot... turns & twirls, turns & twirls of diamonds & thorns, of figurines on frosting.
We dance alone, boxed in 2/4 time like chocolate creme swirls individually wrapped, two lives, no, four,
in paper letters posted & read.*

students hurry towards parked cars...
I touch the pane where she touched it—somewhere above the streetlights Northern Lights crackle, the moon rises and God hides His face. Under the snow, spiders spin webs like sticky lace across papery leaves of roses & rhubarb.

Book 7.

"Dad, will you take me to the store?"
my daughter asks. "What are you thinking about?"
"Nothing."
"Then hurry. It may be April, but it's still too cold to walk."

You shuddered when Sylvia read "Daddy," said you'd seen enough in Pipeline camps, you wanted poetry to be beautiful like uplifting sermons that preach but don't.

*You survived seven years among laborers & pipefitters, leering grins, hands eager to paw, women on the wall. You met the producers, men who cheat long distance.
I see their hands in your eyes.*

*Walk with me:
See the absent look in the cloudy eyes of the oily sea otter, bloated, tumbling in the surf;*

see the unblinking stare of the iced halibut dumped in our landfill, oily gills contaminating their white flesh;

see the oiled feathers of hobbling kittiwakes, barbs clinging to barbs like hair sprayed wet; look at the shells washed ashore, oily brown razor clams . . . those black gooey ones are really white beneath the oil—look!

there under the ruined gillnet, a mink glares, his eyes black as the unscrubbed rocks.

*Those are crab eyes, if you wash off the oil and lacquer them, they look like tiny pearls.
No one will know how common they are.*

"Are you coming? I want to go to Foodland—and park in front, by the Rescue Mission."

*Brittle men, stress fractured,
rejected, welded with nickel rod like cracked engine blocks in a wrecking yard—*

*Desotos, Pontiacs, Kaisers, leaders on the scrap heap with weeds holding trunks open;
parts stripped, a wheel here, a rearend there; a warped head lying on a front seat, a missing radiator—*

In Foodland's parking lot, I add a quart of oil to a twenty year old engine, still running but needing constant care.

Book 8.

The Taurus at the light looks like a sketch of the wouldbe designer Alan Sax—he envisioned the future a year before he put a shotgun in his mouth; he was twenty-five, drove a Studebaker Lark & was faced with his forced marriage falling apart.
I never met him, but his sister remains my first love . . .
I wonder how she's doing & why I never said goodbye.

Everyone said it was puppy love, that it wouldn't last, that I didn't know what love was.
As I think now of the past...everyone was wrong, most of all me.
She would've waited, but I was determined to follow her brother's design without seeing the future as he saw it.

It's too late to say goodbye or why I disappeared without explanation: I thought I couldn't wait & I cared too much for her to mention Alan again.

Many midnights I've turned off Highway 101, turned onto Port Street & passed the darkened house where she used to live...I may buy a Taurus, drive to Oregon & once again drive past where she lived at Devil's Lake. I won't know who lives there now, but there'll be a hound asleep on the porch.

Book 9.

MAY 9th, 1989

Falling snow makes today as lonely as November.
I came to Alaska on a lark, fell for the land & for a gypo who didn't log all winter.

Leaving childhood & keepsakes she followed me to Kenai, spent a hard winter in a log cabin, another in too small a trailer, another riding the bus in Anchorage, ten winters altogether, none easy, but it was her fortieth birthday that frightened her.

I saw fear in her eyes, heard it in her voice, felt it in her touch, now not a touch at all.
She'd never have things others have so to the banks of the Willamette, she returned, a soreback unwilling to die in this land of wintry birth—green buds swell birch branches, hold the snow & fail to sway my loneliness...we had no real fights, have no hard feelings, just frozen dreams and nothingness.

She strings pole beans in Oregon, remembering the shabbiness of breakups past: impassable driveways, planks across the yard, tracked mud in her house.
I hate breakup, too. Even the white-cold of January is better than the lying spring.

Book 10.

Headgate open, the flume runs full, water sold by the acre washes alkali dirt off a golden medicine crescent, chipped jasper, the labor of a forgotten Ute.
I see it all, the irrigated sage, tumbleweeds rolling across plowed fields, the hunting hawk & fattened calves, castrated by hormone injection—my thoughts are many books, all about love if I could understand them.

*Dark skies & rain hard as hail drift over vineyards & orchards & plowed fields, some planted, some lying fallow, waiting for a farmer with harrow & drill & tender hands, corn fed strength & love for the land. And the woman alone watching the squall from Hood River wishes the mailman would hurry; she scans the county road lit by lightning shivers.
The letter she waits for, from a farmer's son in Fairbanks, left Alaska last week—the man wrote of Aleutian storms, longliners & crabbers he'd fished, boats with full bows & sleek sterns, of breakup & of willawaws, wind spills like avalanches, uprooting trees on gullied hills.*

Paired geese arrived in Craemer's Field last night; they flew non-stop from Oregon, guided by the crescent moon.
And my friend called to say, "You know, she left me."
"Yes, I heard."
"You want to get together for a beer? We can talk about your essays."

Book 11.

green tamaracks bow to thunderheads, poplars shimmer, birches sway, but stubby spruce tips hang stiff beside drying muskegs where huckleberries, cranberries, mossberries

swell like young breasts—she surrendered virginity

on her mother's couch;
I washed blood from cushions, comforted her, said, Yes,
I love you.
I still love her, but she's ashamed of passion once felt, love that stained cushions yellow like needles of changing tamaracks.

Alone in September, forty,
I stand on the rifle range among stumps and riddled targets.
It's raining on this shoulder not across the road where dust rises in little whirlwinds.

Book 12.

Circles & cycles erupt like Mt. Redoubt, ash clouds ground planes across Alaska & leave stranded lovers separated for the holidays . . .

Gear down, two F-16's glide down through fog & ash, touch down at Fairbanks International—her flight from Seattle, delayed by Mt. Redoubt, will be cancelled at four. I've waited since two. They'll call, the fellow at the ticket counter said, Go home. Forget today. We'll fly tomorrow, or next week, who knows.

Flaps down, the drab fighters rumble past a frightened moose, past rippled icicles hanging from the wind sox, past 747's, idle since Friday's eruption. Still,

I wait in the terminal.

Bristling with machineguns, missiles, followed by contrails, the fighters roll through ice fog—disappear. Hell yes, I'll forgive her. We quarreled, simple fights, forgotten, that settled nothing, meant nothing to me. Squalls, not storms.

The war planes take off again: I hear their roar, fading now like memories—

Book 13.

catkins hang from willows broken by wintering moose.
Found a skeleton, whitened by the long sun, scattered across the greening thatch, gnawed by village dogs, each with one blue eye, one brown. Upstream, among shriveled red berries, tufts of hollow mane mark chase—and kill.

Lean my gun on a willow & wonder if I, carrying one blue-eyed gene, one brown, am more than bleached ribs & disconnected vertebrae.

Square white blossoms of dogberries, like crosses in a graveyard, shade fractured femurs where grass crowds moss. Petals of the crosses fall before autumn turns the willows golden in the setting sun. Trampled clusters of red berries bleed like children salted before birth as children play hide & seek under willows where I lie.

WENT TO A READING TONIGHT

a local poet with recognition who in clear voice read words as smooth as cast silver angels chased & burnished little mirrors of uncertainty strung onto a lifelong chain of doubt—compared to his my scribbling is common cliches.

He said he didn't write about writing didn't compare poems to children sent out to play to children who grow tall & strong & have lives of their own who must be turned loose to challenge a world of uncertainty—he said he wasn't like Stafford who wrote with faith his words would be accepted.

No, he, like Arnold has been educated unto unbelief.

CALLED TO TESTIFY

a murder trial of a fishermen—he did it there's no doubt when & why were the questions to be answered the State sent a ticket paid for my taxi, my dinner my room, my breakfast don't know much it cost us but my identification wasn't crucial—when the first witness took his oath he wouldn't say what he had before wouldn't admit to being in a plane when he should've been on his setnet site

it was just a little lie the truth wasn't worth his permit he was a highliner well respected a likeable fellow but his lie just a little lie made the difference between life & death

so I boarded the evening jet knowing what I said was not enough the State offered a deal manslaughter instead of murder we were lucky—he took it for he probably would've walked so here I am again testifying in a matter of life or death for another fisherman

THE VISIT

she asked if I would mind a minister visiting her I was, I admit, surprized but I had no fear of cross contamination so when he came I went to the shop where I sold a riflescope to the only customer I had all afternoon

I waited an hour before returning to the house where Bibles were hastily closed he seemed a nice enough fellow his handshake firm so when he asked if I could stock a borrowed rifle (he'd broken its stock over a deer) I said, Sure, but I wanted the story of how it'd broken: a bunch of the fellows had gotten together a meat-making bee so to speak had invited him along had lent him the rifle had placed him on a stand where he couldn't fail—a little buck trotted past but the rifle wouldn't fire though he tried & tried again (it had a broken firing pin) the buck fled tried to jump a fence but got entangled in barbwire he knocked it out cut its throat & now had meat to share with me

PERSPECTIVE—

the rip was running rough but our ice was melting fast we had to sell this load of halibut had to cross Akutan Pass had to reach Unalaska & UniSea before warm weather stole hard work but the heavy water beyond Lava Point caused me to hesitate should have caused me to turn around—the seas were building a storm was brewing I could feel the quivering tension in cold Bering water wind transferred strength from two hundred miles away

I didn't know much when I set sail from Homer, my wife for crew—had learned to read charts run a compass course tie knots as a Boy Scout had learned to fish to feed myself & my family had also learned God hates divorce so to save a marriage I sold what I knew bought this boat & charted a new course we didn't have much time to get around Priest Rock before seas would be too rough so I headed into the rip—the rolling rocked us as ripples became racks of water threefourfive feet high, rising, falling, jumping jumping, moving, stretching, jumping—on our crossing from Homer to Kodiak even in the Barrens, we had flat seas although we did see a little rough water in Shuyak Pass but nothing like this—the rip became ridges six, eight feet high ridges that seemed too high too rough for any boat our size ridges that wrenched rudder making steering impossible I was on the throttle, off on again, trying to keep up stay ahead, keep our bow into the next sea—the ridges steepened felt like cliffs that sluffed away under us letting us fall ten twelve feet—twelve became twenty as the ridges became spikes jumping, leaping, straining timbers & nails—pitched & dropped & dropped & dropped again till I looked at the near shore maybe a mile away & wondered if I could walk that far—

twenty feet become thirty foot walls, high as a house, then gone breaking beneath us & falling away only to form again before our bow could lift—the forward hatch cover was ripped away five feet of greenwater swept over the wheelhouse filling bilges backing up scuppers swamping the aft deck low in the water, heavy very heavy, the boat I knew couldn't take another thirty footer—I also knew I could walk that mile but with us heavy nearly helpless

the next wall was maybe, ten feet
& the one after that six hardly rough at all

DOUBLE VOICED—

What is, she asked, double voiced discourse?
I'll give an example, I told my student: one night, driving across America, somewhere in Wyoming, I picked up a radio preacher, a hitchhiker of sorts whose fading signal gave someone to argue with, someone to break the monotony of sagebrush & moonlight.

He was telling a story: a young woman challenged me, said the New Testament doesn't say anything about Sabbath-keeping.
Shadows & jackrabbits caught in headlights leaped away as I, fiddling with the dial, drifted across the centerline, straight before me as a degree of latitude. He said,

I told her I'll show you the Sabbath in the New Testament if you'll observe it.
Listening with twinges of interest, I stifled a yawn. Well, he said, she wouldn't take my deal, but I'll make that same deal with any of you. I knew the Scripture he would reference: at least I thought I did so I reached for the dial as a coyote, lit suddenly by headlights, traveling, ears up, tail drooped, loped diagonally across the black asphalt. Friends, he said, I want to offer you a booklet, gratis, that'll make plain the Sabbath is the test commandment. I thought I recognized his voice so this time keeping my Maverik on my side I found a Canadian station playing country Music—but after a song, I turned back . . . he wasn't there. I picked up a little static & ended up listening to Los Angeles traffic reports: a stalled car in the northbound lane at Santa Monica. I really didn't care.

JUST A WOMAN

She's just a woman, he wrote, explaining why I wouldn't be seeing her again. *She's pregnant & alone. A one night affair.
And now she's ashamed.*

I don't know this man who wrote, She's just a woman, who took it upon himself to explain why my student hasn't been to class.
He identifies himself as a neighbor.
A well educated one: his English skills are better than I expected so far from Moscow.

She's just a woman, a phrase archaic & patriarchal yet one that echoes the humanity of the person the frailty of someone like myself who, as we all do, comes short of the glory of God.

She's just a woman both condemns & protects: he doesn't condone the affair, nor does he expect perfection of her. He writes from duty & friendship as a father might as a rabbi would—if my Russian were better I'd visit this neighbor.

She's just a woman as Eve was but it was by Adam that sin entered the world.

She's just a woman who needs forgiven & a helping hand, but I still have a room full of students eager to learn hopeful of bettering themselves & lucky so far.

And I am merely a man.

QUITTING CANTON

Decades and villages: British & Yankee missionaries preached repentance to the yellow heathens, but few Chinese accepted Christ till Hong Xiuquau read about Jesus...years earlier, he, of a royal family, stood in dream before a great sovereign where, scolded, he was river washed by an old woman, given a new heart, a sword, a seal, sweet fruit.

He prayed to this foreign god, smashed classroom idols, promised he wouldn't worship evil spirits. Soon thousands of followers, taught as Paul had Bereans, knelt before the God of Abraham and kept the Sabbath holy. Hong banned smoking tobacco, opium; stopped the binding of women's feet, polygamy, the slave trade—the year was 1846, beginning the era of civil war, the opium wars . . .

maybe they were jealous, the missionaries, the ghosts.
Hong's Taiping movement was certainly within orthodox Christianity so was it merely a dispute about which day to worship the Creator that caused Christian nations and denominations to spurn

Hong? They sent rifles, cannon, opium to the emperor till no one stood before ghost soldiers, not even old women on yellow river banks.

december sabbath—

sunset was at two—

all day I cut

white spruce and black; found a moose,

all but its hooves

eaten by wolves.

I worked until the early Sabbath stopped my saw. Now my boots by the door,

my chair near the stove,

I eat dinner

while the red skidder roots gritty snow.

millennium fever—

he stopped by on his return from Lewiston where expecting a meteor shower he stocked up on rice & beans so he would escape a grocery panic if scanners couldn't scan he wanted to talk about the seventh day & when that day becomes a millennium of rest for those who've labored swimming upriver has never been easy there have always been weirs designed to confuse, dams designed to stop, gigs & gaffs designed to impale a simple design to reproduce the question posed was where would saints spend the Millennium I argued for here the meek are to inherit the earth; Christ returns here where he's needed; firstfruits are to meet him in atmospheric clouds but a consensus of Christian scholars would have saints either in heaven or heaven bound where great things await—across the road a fisherman ignoring private property signs stopped, unlimbered his rod & started over the bank in search of steelhead that might have made it through the maze of downstream obstacles

I should tell him to move his pickup but his lure will be just another set of hooks promising great things

US & THEM

1.

Took a graduate course how to teach literature that focused on confrontation a strategy for including others
excluded by some dominant model of truth.
I should, I learned, challenge cultural & political order with ideologically subversive schemes & practices to destroy & reform.
I am, I'm told, part of a metatext that must be killed—for some reason I'm the problem the cause of injustices against which confrontation cultivates anger & when narrowly focused anger, I'm told, affects positive change.

There is, I'm told, too much in the canon about the territorial imperative or manifest destiny or the westward expansion of America. But it was my forefathers who broke bread at that first Thanksgiving then pushed west into Michigan, then Oregon.
Does that mean there's too much in the canon about me? There is, I'm told, too much about various symbolic economies operant within that territorial imperative, meaning there's too much about Yankee seamen, Minutemen farmers, railroad workers, oil field roughnecks truckers, loggers & fishermen, about what I do have done, about my father & his father grandfather, greatgrandfather, too much of my history. The canon, I'm told, contains far too much patrilineal genealogy & Judaeo-Christian theology—my mother traced her lineage to the preacher who preached the funeral for Mary, Queen of Scots.
I know for she told me over & over again so I wouldn't forget family history. She told of her mother teaching in a one-room schoolhouse; told of her mother attending, in 1910, art school in Chicago; told of a great-great grandmother who couldn't comb her own hair when she came to America in 1680. As a royal daughter, she'd always had attendants till she arrived generations after my mother's father's family arrived after my father's family arrived. Mom told stories so I wouldn't forget who I am how I got to this place at this point in history how I'm connected to God & this earth.

But I feel the polarized crosshairs of twoism aimed at my groin. Perhaps this is how my forefathers felt when they fled Holland & England, one tide ahead of bishops & queen.
Didn't authorized churches declare my forefathers other —certainly they did both on the Continent & in Britain.
So how is it that I, still marginalized in beliefs & economics, am the oppressor?
How can seamen or farmers or even preachers oppress generations not then conceived?
How can royal daughters, mothers & grandmothers oppress granddaughters or great granddaughters?
How can I, a logger, fisherman, riflesmith now woodcarver & writer, oppress scholars university faculties & students so far removed from this timber patch along the Clearwater?
Can the problem be the color of my penis?
Evidently it's not brown enough for if it were darker my art would sell better & for more, or so I was told by two gallery owners.
My prose would mean more would be sought by publishers or so I was told by two agents . . .

we used to read books for what they said.
Even Doctor Johnson thought moral instruction more important than aesthetics but paradigm shifts elevated epistemology myth motifs, language, & imbedded social codes.
Now we read texts for what they mean—they have become flint flakes forming & reforming cultural traces shards void of knowledge or of wisdom.

2.

Newly married when Watts burned in '65 I didn't understand terms like us or them. I read about guns, built guns repaired them, shot high-power & black powder; so when, in '68, Detroit, Chicago, Washington burned, my sympathies were with the cops who bludgeoned Blacks, SDS activists—I began to understand us & them. We were the good guys, the ones with justice on our side.
Rocks & rioting were wrongs that must be suppressed. We had the right to strike back hard. After all, doesn't God & Country require respect for authority—that's party-line thinking void of genuine thought for if the world is split in two life's decisions are simplified: Hitler's SS knew what to do with Jews.
No soul-searching was necessary.

Many Norse sagas tell of trying to hold together a society slaying itself when everyone not family was other.

Empowerment of the other makes the other us—victimization requires victims & victimizers reversible groupings.
A confrontational pedagogy promotes continuance of this polarized cycle producing repeating burnings of Los Angeles.

3.

A bunch of us, loggers & shooters were sitting around a fire when, summer of '72 someone asked, "What happened to Dave Oleman?"
"He got religion," someone answered.
And Gary Gettman said, "You'll never know who'll fall next."

I knew, I knew I was next—I didn't want to be religious—I wasn't looking for God—my life was going reasonably well.
But I'd read Melville's retelling of Jonah so I sort of knew what might happen if I fought that sudden feeling of you're next.
It was best, I concluded, to ignore what might be merely last night's onions.

But nothing went away—I was challenged on questions of Natural Law, the Sabbath Holy Days, subjects unrelated to the workings of firearms.
Even the simplicity of Give your heart to the Lord became complicated. Linguistics matter for what are the signifieds of give, heart, lord although then I didn't have the language to ask or answer problematic questions.

When I read the Judaeo-Christian text I didn't find a polarized moral system that recognized only saints & the damned.
Rather, I found a deity separating neighbor from neighbor, prescribing to both how they should treat the other.
I found a bridge between good & bad a bridge that defined both a bridge along which most motives hover near the middle, ever fearful of falling...differences between two parties are either mediated by agreement or continued through violence.
We must choose between two or three—confrontation is counterproductive—it turns what might have been flexible poles into concrete sculptures, rigid & not easily eroded by reason.

I, a reluctant inductee, entered with this deity, a covenant relationship as did my Dissenter & Separatist forefathers.
Grace was a gift, but Faith, I discovered was the sieve through which I was strained—dirt & puffiness, long-carried burdens & a lot of social junk were screened out or scraped loose. Others can pass but only when humble & clean.

But I have no time, no strength to seek after what others do for my passage through faith has been like the looped introduction to a radio talk show, repetitious but readily identifiable.

4.

Allusions, says Jakobson, are signs that produce an imbalance between signifier & signified, resulting in signified surplus analogous to overfilling a wine glass the resulting spill staining the source text in a disordered or unstructured way.
Perhaps that's what happened to the Bible—it's been so stained by spills of red wine it's not the book my forefathers or their forefathers read not the text carried at the funeral of Mary, Queen of Scots.

But source texts are cleansed of alterations when allusions no longer produce surplus meaning an antipoetic way of saying when enough of society no longer knows Faulkner, Lawrence, Joyce or Eliot Greek myths & the Bible will become to another generation newly discovered texts to be believed used or rejected. The centuries of questions of challenges, of apologies, of doubts that went into our cultural institutions & the self-images they reflect, a metatext one-sided & authoritarian, difficult to kill, will be forgotten for good or for bad if feminist pedagogy motivated by political ends is prosecuted for correcting gender inequalities. My family, our history our eradication, that of patriarchal

Western culture, is the aim of feminist theorists; I am their target, me, a Sabbath-keeping Christian, self-employed, struggling to just get by—perhaps some good will come from their attack on me; perhaps they will accomplish what no Christian theologian has been able to do:
free the Bible from myths & ghosts cultural baggage—

So now when little of Milton & of Melville is read, are we, through our loss of literacy preparing ourselves for a tidal wave of rising morality so that never again will I scribble,
the President's on TV
this morning explaining inappropriate contact pussyfooting around the question of having sex but Realtors are coming to show where we live so with turkeys loose & a rooster missing
I can't watch this man deny, deny, deny . . .

BURIAL—

I stood beside Mom as Dad's vaulted coffin was lowered into the winter cold grave—a bright breeze & taps played over a loudspeaker made my thoughts hard to hear, but I remember having heard Dad's soul was in heaven with God—said in sincere words by ministers & members of a fire department that couldn't revive Dad the assurance of heaven, told to comfort five kids & a distraught widow, snapped like the flag that January afternoon:

since fifteen, Dad hadn't attended church hadn't lived a particularly moral or immoral life: he was an average guy who put the war behind him & worked long hours providing for a young family.

To prove a stepfather wrong about the Sabbath I searched Scripture when I was thirteen:
I didn't want to attend church;
I wanted to hunt, fish, play ball Saturdays, wanted to be like Dad.

Between black leather covers, on pages still crisp, I found Commandments I didn't want to keep—also found we are souls, nephesh; we don't have souls. Prove it yourself.

So all but memories of Dad remain buried in Willamette National near the flagpole dead to everything that's happened these past forty years.

FROM THE MARGINS

1.

Dark forests blanketed windward slopes where Lewis & Clark reached the Pacific. Salish Indians then inhabiting river bottoms of this hungry land would have starved if not for salmon & herring shellfish & seals. They grew camas & a little tobacco burning off an acre or two of the darkness, but these ancient forests survived till a second-generation of farmers crossed coastal mountains with their axes & oxen—they came armed by Congress with a decree that the darkness belonged to whomever was able to bring light to the thin, acidic soil—they encountered Salish resistance but their real enemy was the timber that stopped long shafts of sunlight needed for browsing or grazing so every tree felled became a small victory & when California mills sent log buyers north complete victory seemed merely a matter of time, but darkness is also metaphorical: I still find twenty years after Nixon's reelection Watergate less troubling than Georgia Pacific's logging of buffer strips once the corporation learned from research they purchased that these strips provided needed shade for salmon alvins, premigrants.

2.

When Nixon was swept into office—his second term—& GP was logging buffer strips (C.D. Johnson had left them) along the Siletz River, I searched for sound apple trunks, trees I could fall, plank & later use for stock blanks. I didn't cut ones bearing fruit: they lured deer to orchards, all that remained of farmsteads where one, two generations of pioneers had for a season, wrestled from the cold rain forest a few acres of marginal pasture.

3.

I supported Nixon, then but now when I remember '72 I recall abandoned farmsteads I visited, particularly the Van Heinen place. John the age my dad, then deceased, would've been, first took me to see his parents' farm a dozen years before I returned looking for stock blanks.
We emerged from second-growth fir to find, in the distance a magnificent barn of hewn cedar beams & hand split shakes alone on a knoll, a vacant Camelot expecting knights & ladies-in-waiting.
Unpainted, retaining the deep red-brown of cedar heartwood, 100 feet long 40 feet wide, the barn once housed a team of logging horses blooded mares & gelded stallions descended from lines bred to carry knights into battle at Flanders & along the Rhine—I heard their shod hooves as I followed the scraped lane.

4.

The barn was two-&-a-half stories high with a partial hay loft; its beams ran its full length & width.
Inside, a few rusting tools most too worn to salvage & slick from mildew a leather horse collar hung over a cross beam.
Milking stanchions of clear grain cedar split into two-by & four-by lumber were worn smooth & low piles of manure still needed shoveled ... grass & bracken ferns clover & alders—the hilltop meadows were no longer bound by sagging barbwire clinging like last year's pole beans to leaning posts.

The old house where John & his brothers were born was across a swale & next to the orchard: apples, pears quince—introduced varieties.
And from fresh, deep tracks I knew many deer were coming for apples; so while John bucked a wood log into blocks I sat in the springhouse where cream was once kept cool my rifle across my knees waiting for evening.
I felt I belonged there.
A few cows & a market for cream I could milk a few Shorthorns for needed cash...dairies no longer buy single cans of cream & I couldn't have kept the forest pushed back.

5.

I returned to that farmstead my senior year this time to get the school counselor a deer—his last chance was the agricultural hunt either sex within a mile of farm land farm land defined as ten tilled acres.
Although I knew the place didn't qualify the counselor didn't or if he did, he wanted a deer bad enough to ignore the infraction—he filled his tag while I picked through rumble—toppled by the Columbus Day storm the barn was scattered beams & shingles dreams strewn through persistent alders waist high.

From the Columbus Day storm to Nixon's reelection, ten years passed. I married fathered three daughters served as shop steward in GP's mill in Toledo & opened my own shop, building muzzleloading rifles, lock, stock & barrel.
I saw greed link landscapes—greed of pulp mill foremen translated into black-liquor spills those spills draining into the Yaquina killing oysters, clams, crabs beginning a spiral of death.
Greed caused me & others to gaff salmon on spawning beds until there wasn't a run in Lincoln County's Bear Creek.
Greed caused neighbors to snipe trees across sale lines until whole mountains were mowed.
A little extra production a few extra fish a bonus log or two minor thievery that seemed not to be theft at all but like not listing all of your income something that was expected something everyone does something no more wrong than what presidents were doing.

6.

I wanted to believe in Camelot even if it was one without people—I became disillusioned with big government, with big business with monomyths & universal goodness.
I turned Republican when it looked like Kennedy took our missiles out of Turkey to get Soviet missiles out of Cuba when I learned of our reprehensible conduct at the Bay of Pigs.
Billy Sol Estes
the Gulf of Tonkin

the Plumbers
even my poaching apple trees—what was & remains most polluted in America is personal integrity.
We are those pulp mill foremen who sought a little more production by crowding precipitators & scrubbers until both were plugged, spewing ash & salt from recovery boilers killing the firs on the hill there at Toledo.
GP bought the hillside & fell the snags so they wouldn't stand as skylined skeletons pointing bare boughs at the mill.

7.

When cutting stock blanks now twenty years ago, I found tanzy, a noxious weed, poisonous to domestic livestock, growing wherever sunlight shone their necks softened by rain their seed-heavy heads bent low.
A decade earlier there hadn't been any—I would've noticed—to then have tanzy growing on your land was illegal an unendorsed & unenforceable law.
Stump ranchers fought its spread unchecked in state & federal forests.
All farmers could hope was to keep its poison out of their calf pastures.

Tanzy even grew in the sagging springhouse of the Van Heinen place—the main house had collapsed. Only the orchard remained.
If I hadn't known of the barn I wouldn't have thought such a building possible: the tangle of long cedar beams from trees larger than now exist was completely overgrown by alders.
I found a rusty shovel, filed short & a few barn shakes whether from the roof or the sides I couldn't tell.
The farm's impact was less than that of a lightning strike.

But with spreading tanzy there can be no return of the previous forest until shade from second-growth firs & hemlocks deprives underbrush of sunlight completing the cycle begun with the axes & oxen.

WHERE WERE YOU

when the President was shot thirty years ago the question of the day asked by newscasters commentators, pundits by JFK specials on every network?

I was in college—had started Willamette University that fall, a 16 year old Freshman—after spending the summer monogramming hotel linen, I stopped by home on my way back from Reno . . . the house was empty except for two boxes of my clothes, dank & mildewed.
I didn't know Mom had moved, had no idea where everyone was—I took the boxes & caught a ride to Salem, not a city of peace but of worry.

November 22, 1963, began like every other day since Mom leaned over my rifle—
they repainted the ceiling Spackled the hole that sucked blood & bones through attic & roof...
I once shot a buck & another with that same bullet—went through the ribs of the first then through the ham & shoulder of the other & kept on going through alders & berries & who knows what else.
It might still be killing killing, killing—

When I returned from class the dorm was gathered around the only TV set: Johnson had already taken the oath as if he couldn't wait longer for promises made & broken.

Bobby would get to the bottom of what happened, but another bullet left unanswered questions of currency & conspiracy.

A caisson carrying dreams closed Camelot for me.
Goldwater's son visited my dorm, but couldn't convince young socialists of conservatism's merits.
I wasn't impressed by him but I wasn't old enough to vote till Democratic good intentions quelled riots & fires with my tax dollars.

Nixon had a plan
& I had a business—
I built guns that would kill killed
continued to kill.

a thing borrowed—

for early cells of persecution nothing nearer than heaven seemed beyond Roman reach so a borrowed concept fit a need for escape a need that continued through plagues & trenches & quiet desperation that gave rise to teachers who shackled resurrected guilt as if it were a thundering tiger to be brought forth threatening noble & ignoble when tithes dipped a little, but a thing borrowed needs to be returned & the concept of saints in heaven has been held far too long, not that those who need to escape will give up their escapism—am I a heretic for suggesting we die & remain dead until resurrected from a memory to live here where we're needed then sobeit

RAIN

Across the river nine does, each heavy with fawn, browse in hard rain & sleet this last Sunday in February as polished shoes slosh through puddled parking lots—raspy voices sing hymns of praise as rain slides in sheets off metal roofs & I wrestle with resurrected saints replanting native marguerite daisies & elderberries on bruised hillsides where star thistle has choked out everything except the rain.

Praise echoes through hallways & past the guest book I might've signed if given enough time, but groanings of an old spirit strong as hunger in expecting does, drenched, probably cold, certainly sensing birth is near, question leaving behind traditions ancient as that mail route. I need to post letters to the swelling flock gathered last, letters to a brother, to brothers & sisters of faith—the salve they need is today free if they'll forget trying to escape the rain.

EARNESTNESS

When Victorians washed God, he shrank,

shrank,

shrank.

They rescued him from their lye suds, dried him by coal fires, stuffed him with earnestness, sewed buttons of respectability onto his tattered waistcoat, powdered him with scented talc, and propped him in the corner.
He smiled at their respectability, stoked their fires with unearned coal, fed their steel mills foreign ore, and called watchmen out of a disillusioned wasteland to record their deeds with horn & ink.

That Lie Job Believed—

in grammar school, between graham crackers & chocolate milk, my gray-haired teachers told of the Titan who rolls the rock uphill with remembered boldness as his heart, still beating, torn from his chest by vultures or an eagle, I can't remember which, splatters fear upon generations since who hesitantly approached God believing if truly just He would receive them as near-equals. This God of Abraham & Isaac remains mysterious even today when we no longer see religion as moral obligations but cause of friction in fractured societies: if once-perfect angels can't please God, what chance have mortals.

THE TRADEOFF—

all night rain heard on the tin roof, a patter broken by barking
sometime during the dark, probably a deer,
maybe a bear coming too close like the turkeys called by my turkeys that nervously stole up the driveway to peck pea screenings, their empty craws growling like the dogs chained to steel posts who would trade their full bellies for freedom to run & run & run till hunger catches their collars & returns them to their groveling.

HILLY—

it's too early to know which of us will outlive the other—statistically I'll win
I'd better win—got him when four weeks old answered an ad in the paper they seemed afraid I wouldn't return insisted I take him then so I became mother & siblings five years ago until I remarried he slept on the bed with me still wants to—took my side in newlywed tiffs pissed on her books each time we squabbled

he caught stray dogs the years I caught dogs kept three pit bulls off me became sort of a legend when a neighborhood bully threw a punch he helped out—the fellow insists he's the only reason I wrestled him down held him till the sheriff came perhaps so he goes where I go lies beside my feet even as I scribble this he probably has another seven or eight good years but there'll be a day when we part company & as the wise one once asked who knows my spirit will rise & his will descend when we both will sleep

DOES IT MATTER?

Feet in air, asleep, Hilly lies trusting between my feet as I quietly wrestle with whether it matters to God that a Christian believes souls slip into heaven—for two millennia grace & for the saved heaven have been preached from high pulpits & on river banks...across the road the Clearwater runs muddy; steelhead fishermen sit in cafes drinking coffee—I stare at this computer screen, my coffee cup empty. If I move I'll disturb the dog so I sit here somewhat paralyzed as if fearful of deconstructing the good work done by those with a passion for souls—I don't know that I've a passion for souls but I, as our Earth wears ever closer to a promised return, foresee a crisis of faith for Believers who believe they have heaven-bound souls when they awake—errors can be hard to see even when awake harder to admit when face must be saved.

The cat's in heat: her caterwauling awakens Hilly who sniffs her after rolling from between my feet. He's a bit interested—he's too big to do more than be interested; nevertheless with arched back he squeezes her between forelegs, & I, with sharpened tongue, snap, Leave her alone!

THE POULT

1.

Awakened by the harvest moon, the black hen thrashed in her crate as we sped north hurrying to get that load of birds to the Clearwater before dawn—

I feared the hen would crush her poults, only three now after days of warding off feral cats. Months ago, she lost her first clutch to a skunk. An angry neighbor destroyed her second nest—used a weed wacker to drive her away.

So wanting to calm frayed instincts & poults too young to travel alone,

I asked God, there along the Salmon River, if he could, in this mother's small mind, quiet the panic. I said it was a small thing I asked, not something important like saving the world, or stopping killing in Africa. I reminded him of how hard she worked at being a mother, & how he kept track of feathers on a sparrow,

& how there was nothing I could do to stop her thrashing, & she, as if blinded by oncoming headlights, hunkered low as we started up White Bird hill, where Nez Perce warriors once stopped the United States.

2.

I released the black hen & her poults in the barn...she took her babies up past the spring, through stream & showers.
She'd been separated from the flock long enough the other hens wouldn't accept her or her out-of-season hatchlings.

They drove her farther uphill, drove her away from feed, away from safety.

I found her with a ruffed grouse under a seedling apple, with one poult, its down wet, spirit damp. I tried to catch it, but the hen tried to drive her away—she came in low, leading with a wing as a boxer would with his jab.

The poult fled into brambles, & I backed away.
It needed its mother's warmth & she clucked softly, trying to coax it from the thorns.

And I asked you, God, for its life—felt a little embarrassed to ask for so small a thing when there is so much need, felt a poult hatched so late in the year never stands much chance of seeing spring.

Let nature take its course, I tried to tell myself—but the hen, instincts strong, knew nothing less than nurture; so with mumbled words swollen by compassion, I again reminded you of sparrows & of how we are a little flock, with some of us beyond long-closed frontiers.

3.

A week went by, then a second. Tiny feathers sprouted from the shoulders of the poult—the black hen left the timber, brambles & brush of the hillside once, sometimes twice a day to scratch for pea screenings alongside the barn.

When that flock of wild turkeys, its toms no match for mine (toms gobbled & hens whelped—for awhile it seemed as if rival high school gangs were contesting turf), crossed the barnyard, the poult & black hen were under the gravenstein in the front yard, far from the carryingson.

Seeing her shepherd her baby, protective, menacing to friend & foe, I felt pride, connected; felt as if I were part of their family.

So it hurt when I found the black hen, just thirty yards above the barnyard, partially devoured, her flesh gnawed from her neck & breast. I couldn't identify the predator that killed her: it had consumed a fair amount of meat, but its jaws were weak as it hadn't broken bones, A fox, perhaps.

A large raccoon, more likely. Maybe even a bobcat.
But not a coyote. Whatever it was, it was near enough the barn to cause concern so I now carry a rifle just in case it returns, & it will.

Couldn't find the poult.
I suspected the easy meal the poult seemed attracted the predator's attention, brought mamma into the fray; suspected the only good thing about her loss was that I wouldn't have to watch her mourn her poult. But when I went to feed the following morning, there was the poult, trying to be mothered by uninterested pea hens.

The turkey hens drove it away: it wasn't theirs.
Spring poults, nearly as large as their parents, paid it no attention. I tried to catch it, but it was too quick. So chilled & I'm sure hungry, it hid among thorns until I retreated after scattering a little feed in the brambles.

For two days, I kept my cats away as I scattered feed, & it hid or ran with the larger poults. But finally, I trapped it in the barn; so now penned with a spring poult for company, it remains fearful of me even when I bring hardboiled eggs or apples...but it is alive.

answering the summons—

the dogs barked when the pickup stopped across the road at five a.m. they wouldn't stop

a fellow rang the doorbell now I'm a big guy rough looking but I must confess
I didn't much like answering a knock in the dark the young man said a retreat had come apart, that he had neither jack nor spare asked if he could use our phone while keeping hands inside jacket pockets

if Christ were to knock how easy would it be to invite him in when too much has happened—before I came here neighbors just south of Pocatello were murdered by someone who exited the freeway just to shoot someone else not even in Eden has this been a safe world chances have to be taken so on this rainy cold morning I invited him in to use our phone but I never turned my back to him

SHE KNOCKED—

nursing child bundled against the rain, seeking help (a little rock in the road punched through the oil pan of her RAM) at a seldom-used door, she rang:
I need to call my boyfriend.

I looked at the damage: a crankcase of oil floated on rivulets of rain—its sheen flowed across pavement & gravel & mud & into the Clearwater swollen & churning...

Can I get some water for the baby, she asked as if water had a price, as if her baby were an object—our water comes from a spring high on the hill; comes without pump without permission, without poisons; comes like belief in God like believing her son needs the stability of till death do us part; but she doesn't ask for the stream, only a small bottleful so while she waited beside the phone I talked to an older son who stayed close to his mother till a kitten purred.

READING AUGUSTINE'S ON CHRISTIAN DOCTRINE,

I find Paul & Plato bound together in his words as if in things & signs & rhetoric the Word that spoke all into existence had neglected to fully explain so great a matter as the souls of mortals in heaven or hell—nevermind the soul that sins shall die for this death is merely, according to Augustine, the absence of God—I understand why rational men rejected Christian orthodoxy one, two, three centuries ago.

Even the Preacher three thousand years ago realized the fate of animals & of humans is the same: who knows my spirit will rise?
A Greek whose Republic proved unworkable?

Augustine contends all Christians must accept that neither the soul nor body suffers complete annihilation—this is what I hear in pulpits sixteen centuries later, but Peter on Pentecost assures us that even King David has not ascended into heaven; for if heaven awaits Christians there is no need for a Resurrection at Christ's Second Coming nor for the meek to rise incorruptible to inherit this corrupted Earth to make deserts bloom.

North's Chuckwagon, Spokane, 1983—

hadn't seen my brother for a decade so when I returned to the Lower 48 for Fall Feast we got together at North's...daughters, wife, sister & her boys, Ben & myself all young enough to take advantage of all you can eat, piled plates high—all but Ben avoided the prawns but he thought us legalistic so as we practiced gluttony theology was chewed more thoroughly than the chicken & roast beef—if we swallowed without chewing we could keep abreast of subjects as polished as the restaurant ware of arguments as thin as the worn forks of explanations as meager as the instant potatoes but when the sin of Satan popped into the discussion dessert was momentarily forgotten—with furled brow & thirty prawns already taking their revenge Ben insisted we committed error in believing we were to be adopted into the family of God. Satan, he said, thought he would be god.

Don't remember how I answered Ben who believes he is (& he might be) part of the Laodicean church—the prawns were making an argument for clean meats—but I missed saying, Satan wants heaven as do all those whom he deceives.

I was too stuffed for cake & ice cream too full to even finish a last piece of chicken so as we rounded up kids & said our goodbyes I was thankful to be here on Earth where work needs done so all humanity can, if they want eat too much fried chicken.

GRANDMA WROTE POETRY

rhymed, with twisted syntax about Easter lilies & a god she came to know after two daughters were in heaven— I read a few of her poems—left me embarrassed to identify myself as a poet just as someone witnessing about being heaven bound leaves me embarrassed to admit being a Christian but in this postmodern era poetry is imbedded codes you or I think poetic

I heard again last night what I've heard too many times—You can't control falling in love—a cultural lie, destructive love is a decision intellectual, yes emotional, certainly but it isn't lust or escape of responsibilities here where you & I live

Mom splattered herself across the ceiling when she found herself trapped in marriage—her sister, after divorce, lived in her car till committed—neither died a rhymed death cold when I awoke this Easter morning, I kindled a fire that smolders beneath a second armload of wet yew as the risen sun melts frost white as robes of saints in heaven if the witness of the old liar who advocates love as instinct is believed . . .

SUNDAY SUNRISE—

my turkeys gobble & pea hens holler & snowstorms quarrel with the calendar above this river canyon where rain & radio signals flood spouts & drain fields. Standing water on new grass softens an already soggy lawn as crass commercials, as G. Gordon dubs them, play on the radio—upriver, rabbits that lay colored eggs are given to children dressed in, this year like last, their Easter best.
An explanation of the Cross follows an ad for a phonic game—we should all be glad His blood blots out our sins. But how do three days fit between Friday & now?

WHEN MILTON SOUGHT TO JUSTIFY THE WAYS OF GOD

he stood on his Creator's footstool to search the heavens for Heaven: he couldn't find it in the north where he believed it to be, couldn't find it to the east or to the west, and to the south he couldn't even find Hell in Copernicus' solar system, so he used Ptolemaic astronomy to get God outside of His creation.

Language was his problem, not limited interest in stars: he had his Adam ask questions that established what telescopes observe—his concern was Father & Son & the nature of the Godhead; he couldn't create a Trinity where none exists.
Today we know more of worm holes than of heaven or hell: we watch Star Trek, but our language still limits how we explain a triune God when every word conveys individualness, the burden of grammatico-historical exegesis—rationalism places eternity at the unlocatable end of a linear time continuum that begins with a bang, making eternal life exceedingly long & exceedingly difficult to comprehend when it is nothing more than existence outside time: the unpoetic language of quantum physics does easily what Milton wrestled with when creating Chaos: we find Heaven in a sixth or a seventh or some other dimension; we perceive spirit as energy & elemental force; but we still are intellectually dishonest in our attempts to be theologically correct—our Adversary broadcasts not just in the granny glasses of acid rock or spiked hair of heavy metal but also in radio sermons about a Trinity closed to adoption of sons & daughters who, like their first-born older brother, will live outside time at their resurrection.

CARL SAGAN—

in Reflections on a Grain of Salt you find your ideal universe like the one we inhabit in which everything's knowable but not known . . .

I know you through your TV series heard the best explanation yet of why evolution is faith in past & present creations—all belief is faith . . .

faith proves facts to be factual—you & I are part of a community not shared but privileged readers & writers of text about grasping truth . . .

truth is elusive, a chameleon that suns itself on the rough bark of our shared culture, pruned & needing pruned, of Greek & Hebrew roots . . .

rootstock isn't selected for fruit it bears—with sharp knife & patience the desired scion is grafted to wild roots. We both are of that chosen scion . . .

scions often develop several leaders each competing with the other.
You shinnied far out on a twiggy leader that needs headed . . .

head cuts are to strengthen branches to turn wouldbe leaders into scaffolding that'll support more fruit—so when you awake, I'll be there to say, Greetings, Carl Sagan.

ON THE BAPTISM OF MY SECOND DAUGHTER

I first saw you blue with zipper tracks attaching arms & legs. Nine pounds twelve, fourteen inch head, you arrived without stitch or tear, quietly squirming.
Your mother & I watched you crawl around stacks of blocks, check their lean, then tip them over; always cautious, calculating odds, you were,
you are industriously bold.
We took you fishing in the Aleutians—you learned about sea urchins, hair crab, star fish, and we waited for you to make sandwiches: you'd spread mayo or peanut butter from crust to crust to crust, experimentally meticulous.
Correspondence study gave way to school, letters in track, performer of the meet, best of show for an oil painted from a slide I took of you deer hunting, Trig Star, outstanding math student.
Your rewards were rewarded by an Honors scholarship to Alaska, where your four point meant less to you than baptism and taking the Bread & Wine at your first Passover.
The world you've joined and the larger world that'll think you're odd but industrious—both acknowledge you now as an adult, one able to participate equally with your mother & me.
She wasn't there to see your baptism, but I was never more proud of you; for you're walking in that Way unmarked by the world.

WEASELS

my daughter & I crossed Ugak to stay in that cabin behind Gull Point but when I pushed open the door I smelled the weasel before I saw it on the bunk where I sleep clicking tiny teeth feigning attack hissing its thrusts those of a striking snake fearless & fearsome—it tried to back me out the door but I pointed my .458 at it said, Bang

it dove for a gnawed hole & disappeared as if never there my daughter missed seeing it but she was well acquainted with the one across the bay that did back flips till some fisherman tossed it a bullhead which it dragged to its lair only to return again to do more back flips so she asked, Was it cute cute is not a word I associate with weasels so tiny but so very feisty—in a Sabbath sermon a Kenai minister recalled a pair of weasels that once invaded his cabin even the way he said weasels told of what evil animals he thought they were this minister wasn't used to being defied & his weasels stood on his kitchen counter challenging him

he trapped one put a .22 bullet through the other (& through his wife's dishpan) so he used the pair as examples of how tenacious sin is in a Christian's life

I was a little surprized that sin was so easily dispatched after dinner my daughter sat on the top bunk examining fractures in found agates when the shorttailed weasel already in its summerbrown phase stood up a foot from the stove—it hissed dropped down bounced closer hissed again

He is cute, my daughter said swinging her legs off her bunk the weasel spun squirted through a hole under the door with my daughter right behind—she got a glimpse of it bounding over bent roses thirty yards away & I wished sin were so hard to catch

why hell—

The new Chemistry chair, fresh from California, was grilled like potluck chicken barbecued about where she'd attend church.

Her choices were limited: Lutheran or an Evangelical Free Church—to not attend would invite the ire that drove her predecessor to quit.

To subscribe to an Advent or be seen at Kingdom Hall would label her a wacko, would be worse than supporting wolves;

so needing a job & believing in reconciliation, she questioned the retiring minister of the Free Church, asked why he preached heaven & hell & a single day of salvation. He agreed there is no demand a person accept Christ today or be forever lost.

But I'd preach to empty pews if I didn't preach hell, he said, sipping lukewarm tea.

LEGALISM

Bob & I worked with Old Believers, kept our skidder in their village's boat shop, visited homes closed to outsiders—I was falling timber along the outskirts when Solzhenitsyn came to hear again Russian spoken in this land of liberty & exile.

We as a nation didn't want to then hear about ourselves—it was easier to rail against Communism or the intrusiveness of Federal bureaucracies than to listen to a Russian whisper about our moral decay yet an unseen writer with his inkhorn will mark those who lament a nation's sins.

Now, a quarter century later, we hear lying about adultery really isn't lying but protecting the spouse, an act of true family values. We mock ourselves.
Perhaps a belt of spiritual legalism would stay presidential pants.

As I fell stumpy white spruce during the great dissident's visit, I noticed roadside litter ended just outside the village, but in the preceding mile Coke cans, potato chip bags, Twinkle wrappers—items forbidden by village doctrine, forbidden to prevent spiritual contamination—were as many as the mosquitoes: legalism made cheaters of too many villagers, pious as priests Sundays, but wearing their fringe & embroidery as mere identifiers while working in canneries during the week. But that is what Law does when not written on hearts.

JUSTICE

there is a longer story the one I'm hesitant to tell for if heard askew it brings an end to us all I heard it whispered you might have too for it is a story about justice the overriding concern of a generation of my generation:
the civil rights movement Johnson's Great Society the repeal of Blue Laws clean air clean water clean beaches—all are calls for justice but we weren't listening when the story was told so our justice is fuzzy logic concocted by individuals intent upon imposing their justice on others the justice I want can't be voted into existence it can only be perceived in how a people's internal landscape is reflected in their eternal world

FORMLINE—

1.

asked if all I carved were fish I answered a simple no & showed a double otter a crouching bear to the new minister who understands fish as Christian symbols—but I'm not comfortable sculpting icons that might be read as Dagon reasons I carve mostly halibut are simple: I like the form the sense of twisting power I bring to a common wood bowl—

I use smooth flowing sides to tell formline stories in circles of cycles—

but my art is mainly fish because I fished three seasons laying & picking three miles of longline each tide change so through art
I remain connected to halibut even now when I no longer have gaff in hand

2.

with adze & crooked knife I reduce trees to figured bowls sometimes even capturing life so if one of my sculptures spoke simple words, naming other works of my hand, I'd be pleased would feel pride you would too

but if my creation pouted & plotted & proved itself generally disagreeable I'd probably split it into kindling certainly would've when younger but with some maturing I might listen in amusement knowing whenever I wished I could end its contentiousness so here across unbridgeable dimensions I flounder like one of my fish for even simple words to stutter into stories for those who would lift the sky

JONAH—

with Bible in hand the teacher explained great mysteries I sat curious to hear anew what I knew from a salmon following a scent from an alvin wiggling free from an eel scaling a falls—in strong warm heartbeats, I felt the electric pulses of intelligence when this teacher was himself a student so when he, his book open to the only proof said Jonah knew it was fruitless to preach repentance to Ninevah I corrected him: That's not the story.
Jonah knew the people would repent if he delivered news of their impending doom he wanted them dead; he didn't want them saved it took his death in the belly of that fish to get him to go there for he knew God would repent of their destruction if they would repent of their sins—there was more I could have said but I could see I'd already told more story than he wanted to hear I decided to give him a fish so he would remember it was from the mouth of a fish that God sent his reluctant spokesman

